Various causes conduce to this excellent result. In the first place the quality of the beef has greatly improved by the introduction of high bred bulls. Again, greater pains are taken in curing and packing of it, and the quality of salt has also much improved on that used in former years.

In this connection I shall introduce what I propose to submit on the subject of the manufacture of native salt, which I consider legitimately connected with the objects and purposes of this Society. Having very lately had an opportunity of personally inspecting the extensive and long established salt works at Publica, some 10 miles west of Honolulu, I found them admirably conducted by their spirited and enterprising proprietor, who is rapidly extending the area of his operations and erecting a powerful windmill and other improved machinery for the manufacture and preparation of salt, which is now turned out on a large scale, and of vastly improved quality. The system now in operation effectually separates and purifies the chloride of sodium from the sulphates and other impurities with tormerly deteriorated its quality and diminished its value, and at the present time Puuloa salt rules in the market of Sac Francisco text in value to the Liverpool and Turks Island salt. With the exception of the rams above referred to, little has been done this year in the introduction of animals. To the Rev. Mr. Walsworth of California, who visited these islands last year, we are indebted for several lots of sparrows and linnets, forwarded to Mr. C. R. Bishop, by whem they have been set at large, and they are now to be seen and heard, enlivening the scene, amongst the gardens in the vicinity of Honolulu, where I have no doubt they will, in due time, increase and multiply. These welc me strangers, combined with the rapid increase of the kolea, or plover, now tabooed from wholesale slaughter by the statute of last session, may be expected to mitigate and abate the caterpillar nuisance, heretofore so destructive to so many of the products of the earth on these islands.

The honey bee introduced from California last year, has succeeded admirably in well shell-cred localities, where it has proved its aptitude to increase to an extraordinary extent, as will be found by the raport of your Corresponding Secretary.
